MAKING THE CASE

Weinberg Tzedek Hillel seeks to pursue justice and transform communities. In the process of bringing about meaningful social change, participants grow intellectually and spiritually. Hillel understands that there are four essential components to meaningful public service. "Making the CASE" is an overview of the program methodology that each Weinberg Tzedek Hillel is asked to follow. The four components are:

Community Partnerships

Weinberg Tzedek Hillel seeks to transform our communities by creating effective partnerships with other Jewish and non-Jewish organizations on campus, in the local area, nationally and internationally. Many of these organizations offer funding resources, direct service opportunities, educational materials and expertise in training. They provide opportunities for direct service as well as access to programmatic and technical support.

Advocacy

By understanding the root causes of issues and educating activists and the public, Weinberg Tzedek Hillel seeks to perform effective public service and to broaden the constituency for social change. Advocacy enables activists to go beyond short-term answers to bring about meaningful solutions.

Service

Participation in effective, direct-service activities benefits communities and provides powerful experiences for students. Service is a catalyst for self-reflection and personal growth at a time when most students are seeking to define themselves. Weinberg Tzedek Hillels strive to create meaningful and challenging service projects for participants, or partner with existing campus and/or community projects.

Education

Meaningful Jewish learning experiences allow students to make the connection between being a responsible citizen and being a responsible Jew. Hillels have been experimenting with both formal and informal learning techniques to connect direct service with Jewish values. In consultation with Hillel's Joseph Meyerhoff Center for Jewish Learning, Weinberg Tzedek Hillels seek to develop Jewish learning programs that respond to the unique needs of those participating in public service.
